ABSTRACT

Ageing process has a socio-psycho-medical dimension, the differences between elder people being more pronounced than the differences between young people. This particularity is due to the elder people's habits, to their professional experience, to their life experience, to their reaction towards illness, all of these facts contributing to a special social design of ageing process.

Elder people's issue becomes more and more important to a national level, as well as to European level. Social policies regarding elder people must take into account their wishes, their opinions but, also, their physical abilities.

Key words: elder people, ageing process, retiring age, retiring process
